Language requirements

Université de Montréal is a French taught institution and almost all courses are held in French. Proof of minimum B2 (from the Common European framework) French proficiency is therefore required.

Students who are not from a French-speaking institution must provide a certificate/letter delivered by an accredited institution (home university's Department of Languages, French Alliance, School of Languages, etc.) along with the French Proficiency Form (filled out by home university).

Some departments may require a higher level and official tests; see the list of programs with particular requirements for further details.

French courses: Non-French-speaking students can take one French language course (3 credits) offered by the UdeM Language School (students will be charged around 75$ for course materials).

A placement test will be required, information will be provided to students once admitted.

Please see our website for more information.
